1. Email

From: Emily
To: Priya
Subject: University

Hi Priya,
I'm finding it really tough to select the right university course. I wondered whether I could go over the options with you. You're good at seeing things from different angles, which isn't one of my strengths. I need a bit of input from someone else! How about dropping round later? I've bought that cherry pie you love - we can eat it while we discuss things!

Emily

01 Why is Emily emailing her friend?

A To invite Priya to a social event at her house

B To ask Priya if she is available to offer some advice

C To offer to do Priya a favour by making her favourite dish

B To convince readers to purchase new clothing

C To tell readers which shops have bargains

4. Review

Flicks series review: The Overland Series 2

The Overland Series 2 picks up where the last season ended. That creates problems if you haven't revisited Series 1 since its launch on Flicks. It's just as hard to keep up with all the twists and turns this time around, but at least the final scenes aren't mysterious in this series!
The good news is that all your favourite characters are back and they're as realistic as ever!

04 What is the reviewer's opinion of Series 2 of The Overland?

A It is not as impressive as the previous series.

B It might be confusing to some viewers.

C Its ending does not make a lot of sense.

A floating school

READING 2 / BY FOUNDER, ANNA DOMINGO / 6 MARKS

Read the article, then answer questions 1-6 on the next page.

1 I coordinate a floating school which I established several years ago. It is a large motor boat that can carry a classful of students, and my aim was to transport educational materials, such as books and tablets, to young people who live on a remote island without school buildings or resident teachers. Life here can feel isolated, partly due to the lack of internet. While some young people travel to the mainland for continuing education, this can be inconvenient to their lifestyles, especially for those of primary-school age.

2 We take education to students and we have developed a curriculum of subjects which suits life on the island, that varies significantly from the national one used on the mainland. Our programme is more informal and focused around what is relevant to our students' lives. For example, many young people are involved in fishing which is necessary to help support their families. Typical education follows a national curriculum which doesn't cover the maritime or fishing skills required by such students. We try to bridge that gap by teaching relevant skills.

3 So, how does it work? Those in the fishing industry, around isolated islands or otherwise, are well aware of the need to fish in a sustainable manner and avoid destructive practices which might damage marine life. It isn't that there's a lack of understanding about these matters, but we can fill in knowledge gaps and provide relevant up-to-date information on the protection of ecosystems, and skills and techniques to support this. It isn't up to us to tell people how to run their industry, but to facilitate practical learning about what matters for the future of our oceans.

4 Our teaching involves people we call 'field experts'. These are volunteers who spend some of their free time travelling to the island to talk about their professions. We have a good database now, including doctors, lawyers, engineers, journalists, musicians ... you name it! There's usually a relatively brief presentation followed by a question-and-answer session about their roles. Those students who do go on to further education often take the route of one of the professionals they've talked to, and many adapt their university courses to maintain a connection with the island. For example, a medical worker might focus on traditional medicine.

5 Like anything, it takes time for new ideas to take hold, and we've gradually grown to around 200 students. It's hugely satisfying to have seen students all the way through to university and hear them say how keen they are to remain in their island community to give something back through their own learning with us. Sometimes people ask me how we'll continue to develop. To be honest, I think we've got a winning format, so for the time being, we'll continue to deliver our programmes just as they are, responding to change if necessary.

6 Of course, if I'd known what I know now at the start, I'd have done some things differently but on the whole, I'm thrilled to hear that others in a similar situation are looking at what we've done and using our model as a starting point for their work. That's a massive vote of confidence in our work from those working in challenging circumstances who might never have thought it possible.
